Market commentary

Market sentiment improved early during the quarter as both domestic and international share markets recovered from earlier weakness. Falling energy costs and strength in the Australian dollar helped support investor confidence.

The effects of elevated energy prices in April became more apparent across the economy. Business and consumer sentiment weakened, while annual inflation accelerated to 4.6% in March, reaching its highest level in more than two years.

The Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA) increased the cash rate in May, marking its third rise of the year in response to inflation remaining above target. The RBA then opted to leave rates unchanged in June, signalling a preference to review upcoming economic data and evaluate the impact of earlier policy measures.

Economic growth moderated during the first quarter, with gross domestic product expanding by 0.3%, compared with 0.9% in the previous quarter[1]. Conditions in the labour market remained relatively resilient. Employment increased by 32,300 positions in June, while the unemployment rate remained unchanged from the previous month of 4.4%.

Australian equity market

During the quarter, overall sector performance within the S&P/ASX 300 was largely positive. Consumer Discretionary and Technology sectors delivered strong absolute returns and outperformed the broader market. Consumer Discretionary companies benefited from lower interest rate expectations, which improved household confidence on reduced borrowing costs. Technology companies performed well, driven by strong corporate earnings, sustained investment in artificial intelligence (AI) infrastructure, and a broader market rebound supported by a resilient economy. In contrast, the Energy and Utilities sectors declined, with Energy impacted by the resumption of traffic through the Strait of Hormuz and easing of concerns over global supply disruptions.
